

What to Eat at a Baseball Game

It's the top of the ninth inning of a MLB game, the crowd is buzzing, and you're just waiting for a home run. The only problem is that you're starting to feel hungry. Thankfully, MLB stadiums have a lot of food to offer these days. What's more, each ballpark always has a signature dish that is much more unique and tastier than you might expect.

At the Arizona Diamondbacks' Chase Field, baseball fans can try the "churro dog." This dish is made of a warm, cinnamon churro placed inside a chocolate-glazed doughnut. If that isn't enough, it's topped with frozen yogurt, caramel, and chocolate sauce.

If you're looking for something salty, The Milwaukee Brewers' Miller Park has what you need. Fans there can order the "bratchos on a stick." What exactly is this? A bratcho is a stick of beef, stuffed with refried beans, rolled in Doritos, and then deep-fried. Finally, it's covered in sour cream and cheese.

Next time when you attend MLB game in person, you don't have to just order hot dogs and popcorn. You can try something new!
